About five o'clock this morning I reached the house where the President lay in his dying agonies. He was lying upon the bed, apparently breathing with great difficulty He was entirely unconscious, as he had been ever since his assassination, his eyes protruding from their sockets and suffused with blood. In other respects his countenance was unchanged. In the adjoining room were Mrs. Lincoln, her son, Captain Robert Lincoln, Miss Harris, who was with Mr. Lincoln at the time of the assassination of the President, Rufus F. Mrs. Lincoln was under a great excitement and agony, wringing her hands and exclaiming: "Why did he not shoot me instead of my husband | I have tried to be so careful of him, fearing something would happen, and his life sermed to be more precious now than ever, I must go to him!" and other expressions of a like character. She was constantly going back and forth to the bedside of the President, exclaiming in great agony: "How can it be so !"

The scene was heart-rending, and it is apossible to portray it in its living light. Captain Robert Lincoln bore himseif with great firmness, and constantly endeavored to assuage the grief of his mother by telling her to put her trust in God and all would be well. Occasionally, being
